

TOM BUFORD AT LARGE.

FEARS THAT HE HAS MURDEROUS INTENTIONS AGAINST THE BENCH.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Dec. 20.—Tom Buford, the slayer of Judge Elliott, who walked away from the Anchorage Lunatic Asylum 13 months ago and took up his residence in Jeffersonville, Ind., is in Kentucky again, and is said to be thirsting for blood. He has been near his old estate, in Henry County, the seizure of which by the Sheriff to satisfy the judgment of the court against him is supposed to have driven him insane. He is reported to have made threats recently against the Judges of the Court of Appeals, and he is expected to arrive in the Capitol any day. A kinsman of one of the Judges was in Frankfort to-day to give warning. One of the Judges was asked this evening if he apprehended any danger and said, "I suppose he would shoot if he saw anybody."

"The court is evidently uncomfortable," a gentleman said this evening. "There is one Judge whom it will not do for Buford to meet. If he does there will be blood, and that Judge will not wait for a word to be said either. Buford has already made his threats, and he will have to get the drop very suddenly or get the worst of the meeting." Another said, "If Buford remains in Henry County a day or two longer something will happen." He alluded doubtless to the probability of mob violence. Buford is said to be in a desperate and destitute condition, but it will not do for him to go to Frankfort. The McCreary Guards will not be able to save him this time.

The New York Times

Published: December 21, 1883

Copyright © The New York Times